Classroom Commitments

I want my student to feel like themselves in my classroom, free from the burden of keeping up appearances or projecting what they think the world wants to see, free to live authentically and make mistakes without the fear of repercussions.

Students in my class will experience success. They will be empowered to recognize their own talents and abilities, to set goals that are personally meaningful, and to demonstrate their achievement in a way that makes sense to them. Every step towards their goals will be treated as valuable progress and I will make it known that I wholly, irrationally, expect them to succeed at every turn.

I will strive to show each of my students, every day, that they matter, that their voice is important, and that they have a place to belong in my classroom. I will strive to get to know and appreciate my students' lived experiences and how their learning journey has shaped their understanding.

I believe learning should be valued for its own sake; that each new discovery is a cause for celebration and brings us closer to becoming the best version of ourselves. I believe that hierarchical systems are antithetical to learning and that our differences are a strength.
